

Something Wicked #17 (January 2012) (Something Wicked SF & Horror Magazine)

We've got a great bunch of original stories for you this issue. That's right, four brand-new, never-before-seen stories, starting with She Can See Tomorrow Today, by Mel Odom, wherein a young woman negotiates for her freedom. Concerning Harmonies and Oceans by K.A. Dean, is about a young boy whose voice could change his family's destiny. Genevieve Rose Taylor's The Lighthouse is an intimate, nostalgic story set in a small coastal town. And we close off the issue with Cat Hellison's Jack of Spades, reversed, a wholly original SF/Fantasy trip. Our feature interview this month is with both Charlie Human and Sam Wilson, two of the five South African authors featured in Pandemonium: Stories of The Apocalypse, which itself is reviewed in this issue by Karen Jeynes.
