

The Grin (Insomnia: Paranormal Tales, Science Fiction, & Horror)

When seventeen-year-old Cassie Ingersoll gets a last-minute call to babysit on Christmas Eve, she's tempted to just say no. Who in their right mind expects to find someone on such a night, anyway? But there's just so many reasons to accept: her father has been laid off from work; Christmas is going to be a meager affair this year; and what awaits her at home is a tortuous evening of movies with the rents. Most of all, she really wants to get her mother that new jacket she just found at DiMarcos in the mall. It just happens to be outside of her price range. The overnight job promises to be both easy and profitable, so she agrees to take the job. Her problems begin almost immediately. First, she finds her car battery dead. The road she needs to take appears strangely deserted. The house is in the middle of nowhere, and a snow storm threatens to sock her in. And when she arrives, the boy's father just seems to be acting a little too suspiciously, telling her not to go outside. Then there's the boy, a man-child whose hulking frame completely dwarfs her. He seems nice enough, though, gentle and kind. Just before he leaves for the night, the father warns her not to feed him, though he doesn't explain why. She should've heeded the warning, for doing so beckons The Grin, and as she quickly discovers, there's only one way to destroy it. Approximately 11,000 words (roughly 40 pages) Appropriate for ages 14 and up
